The right of dogs to run at large in the country without being shot, provided they are doing no harm, is discussed in an interesting opinion by the Mississippi Supreme Court in the case of Hodges vs. Causey. Causey shot and killed Hodges's dog, a deerhound, as she was running through corn rows in Causey's field in Sunflower County. For this, Hodges sued Causey. In defense, Causey said that his place was posted, that he had twice warned Hodges to keep his dogs off his (Causey's) place, and that he shot the derhound as she was running through the corn rows to prevent her from damaging growing cotton which was to the same field. The jury decided in favor of Causey. The Supreme Court, in ordering a new trial, quoted with approval law to the effect that "one is never justified in going to excessive lengths in the defense of himself or his property from assault or injury"; that "the method of defence must bear a certain relation to the character or priousness of the threatened injury," and that "the fact that a dog is trespassing does not justify his wanton or malicious destruction." The court pointed out that the corn through which the dog was running was fully matured (it was in November), and that at the time she was shot she had done no damage to the cotton. The court said the jury should have been allowed to say whether, in view of all the circumstances, the killing was reasonable.

never Admit Detest.

Never admit defeat or poverty, though you seem to be down and have not a cent. Stoutly assert your divine right to be a man, to hold your head up and look the world in the face; step bravely to the front whatever opposes. and the world will make way for you. No one will insist upon your rights while you yourself doubt that you pos sess the qualities requisite for suc-cess. Never allow yourself to be a traitor to your own cause by undermining your self-confidence.

There never was a time before when persistent, original force was so much in demand as now. The namby-pamby, nerveless man has little show in the hustling world of to-day. In the twentieth century a man must either push or be pushed.

Every one admires the man who can assert his rights and has the power to demand and take them if denied him. No one can respect the man who slinks in the rear and apologizes for being in the world. Negative virtues are of no use in winning one's way. It is the positive man, the man with original energy and push that forges to the front.-Success.

A New York physician in his recent talk on physical culture for mothers offers some very good advice concerning useful exercise. It was a question of giving proper direction to surplus energy and of getting the most out of it. To suggest to young mothers that they should make their own beds and sweep their rooms, and thus expand their chests and increase their arm and back power, is somewhat of an innovation in these days of progressive gymnastics and movement cures. Still, the idea has a very practical application. It narrows us down to the consideration of the fact that Nature provides in our every day work, with its attendant possibilities, all the exercise we generally need. When we ston to think how we can combine the two it is often a matter of surprise. The result is generally a two-fold enjoyment. So, too, the man who splits his own wood gets a double warmth from the effort. It is the extra glow with profitable occupation that is thrown into the bargain before the fire is made on the hearth. The principle appeals to every sensible mortal. We gain much more than a car fare by walking to and from our offices.

No man in South Africa has had a better opportunity of studying the Boers than Sir Alfred Milner, the British commissioner in Cape Colony. He resented the charge that they were cowardly scoundrels by paying them the following tribute: "There are many among our enemies who deserve to be honored for their heroism. Although cases of treachery and barbarity have occurred, they have been exceptionally few. The conduct of the enemy is that of brave men fighting for a rad cause. Yet they are entitled to respect.

An analysis of other chill tonics shows that Grove's is superior to all others in every respect.
